Description

6ft Round Banqueting Table (183cm)

A 183cm (72-inch) diameter round banqueting table with an 18mm plywood top and brown hammer powder-coated folding steel legs. The 6ft round is the industry standard for formal dining at weddings, gala dinners, corporate award ceremonies, and charity fundraisers. It seats 10–12 guests with full place settings.

The table weighs 33–35kg. Two people should lift and position it. The folding steel legs collapse flat, reducing the profile for van loading and warehouse storage. The brown hammer powder-coat finish on the legs resists repeated scuffing from setup and breakdown cycles.

Capacity and Layout

Ten guests sit with standard 45cm place setting spacing. You can fit up to twelve with tighter arrangements, suitable for less formal events where service ware is minimal. The 183cm diameter provides enough surface area for centrepieces, candelabras, water jugs, wine bottles, and bread baskets without crowding individual covers.

At standard banqueting height (76cm), the table works with Chiavari chairs, folding chairs, banqueting chairs, and padded conference chairs without adjustment. The circular shape encourages conversation across the table and eliminates the hierarchy of a head-of-table position.

Typical Deployments

Wedding planners seat 10 per table for formal wedding breakfasts, with space for table decorations. Corporate event managers arrange 8–10 tables in a ballroom for awards dinners. Caterers use them as round buffet islands with food displays radiating from a central floral arrangement. University graduation dinners, charity balls, and Christmas parties all use the 6ft round as their primary dining surface.

Surface

The plywood top is unfinished. Tablecloths are required for formal use. The industry standard floor-length cloth for a 6ft round is 120-inch (305cm) diameter. For casual events, the surface wipes clean with a damp cloth.

Bulk Orders and Floor Plans

Buyers often treat the 6ft round as the core dinner table in a ballroom or marquee and then order around that plan in sets of 10, 20, or 30. A 100 person dinner can sit on ten tables of ten, yet planners still need to allow for dance floors, stages, bars, and fire exit routes before they settle on a count. Many venues seat eight or nine rather than ten when they want wider place settings and more room for service. That choice can improve the guest experience in corporate awards, university dinners, and charity events where guests spend several hours at the table.

Storage also matters in bulk purchases. Round tops use more floor area than rectangular stacks, so venue teams often use upright trolleys and numbered stock bays. A buyer who stores 50 tables can save labour by planning clear routes from goods in to the function room and by pairing each table trolley with chair stacks for one room zone. In transport, crews need enough wall length in the van body to restrain round tables on edge. Those details shape buying decisions as much as seat count.

Pairing Suggestions and Venue Types

The 6ft round pairs with Chiavari chairs for weddings and gala dinners, with padded banqueting chairs for hotels, and with black conference chairs for networking dinners or round table workshops. Caterers often flank the room with 6ft rectangular service tables while the rounds hold guest covers in the centre. Florists choose this size when they need space for centrepieces with candles, charger plates, favours, and wine service. Hospitality teams use it in race day suites, council banquets, NHS fundraisers, embassy receptions, and alumni dinners where guests need a social table rather than a meeting line.

Planners can also mix this table with 5ft rounds in side rooms or with 90 inch oval tables for top table layouts. In a large room, the mix helps teams seat VIP groups, speakers, or hosts without breaking the look of the event. If you need one table for a cake display or drinks welcome point, the EventPro® 3ft round sits well near the main dining set up and keeps the same event furniture language.

Cleaning, Wear, and Structural Use

Two people should handle this table through doorways and on ramps, not just for comfort but to protect the rim and leg frame from knocks. Staff can wipe the top after each event and should dry the underside before stacking if the table has sat in a damp marquee or loading bay. Long term wear often starts at the edge where crews lift, pivot, and rest the table on hard floors. Table covers and separators reduce those marks and keep the stack straight.

The wide top gives buyers room for heavy floral work and full dining service, yet they still need to spread concentrated loads with care. If a production team uses the table for awards, product displays, or stacked glassware, they should keep the heaviest items near supported zones rather than crowd one outer point. The folded frame stores flat, and the open frame holds firm on level ground during service. Teams that build sound loading habits and dry storage into their routine can keep this table working for years.
